

GOING UP | SILVER

When Kelly Taylor was initially approached to work on this high-rise condo in the Residences at the Omni, she thought she was doing a simple “refresh” of the space. But once she got there, her keen designer eye saw the potential to take improvements beyond the basic paint job and furniture update that was ordered. Recognizing the need to bring more light into the home, Taylor added sconces, pendants and recessed lighting in the foyer and dining areas. Almost every surface in the unit got an update as well, resulting in a quieter, more calming color palette. The terrace, little more than a slab of concrete before, was warmed up with boxwoods and turf area rugs to make it an extension of the living space.

INTERIOR DESIGN: Kelly Taylor, Kelly Taylor Interior Design, Providence

PHOTOGRAPHER: Nat Rea

OPPOSITES ATTRACT | BRONZE

When the new owners of this nineteenth-century Barrington Victorian approached 3six0 to create new spaces that were better suited to their lifestyle, they were clear that not just any finishes would do. The kitchen was approached with two different areas in mind: a bolder cooking area, and a more muted sink design. The resulting space brings together a variety of new materials including lacquered panel pantry cabinets, soapstone counters and stainless steel with the original fir floor discovered during demolition. The bathroom brought together elements of light and dark through materials like basalt tile, a walnut vanity and a show-stopping statuary marble floor. Our jury praised the layering of textures, proving that mixing old and new can be a winning combination.

ARCHITECT: 3six0 Architecture, Providence. Kyna Leski and Christopher Bardt AIA, principals

STRUCTURAL ENGINEER: Erik Nelson, Structures Workshop, Providence

GENERAL CONTRACTOR: Joe Wagner, Providence Restoration Company, North Scituate

PHOTOGRAPHER: 3six0 Architecture

