

GOLD residential interior design

Good Cooking

We wish we had space to show you the before pictures of this Providence kitchen — an integral part of a nineteenth-century colonial revival — with turquoise walls and clutter. During the seventies, the space underwent some renovations, but problems remained: an awkward layout, little storage and no room for a breakfast table. Solution? Deftly reorganize the available square footage to forge way for a cozy dining alcove and add more natural light. Display space wherever possible boosts visual interest, an enlarged opening to the dining room eases circulation and tailor-made custom cabinetry ensures it all stays neat. Behind the pared-down façade: efficiency and quality, two lasting elements, our jury reminded us, the owners can feast on every day.

Architect: Jonathan Chambers, Jonathan Chambers Architects, Providence

Interior Design Consultant: Kelly Taylor, Kelly Taylor Interior Design, Providence

General Contractor: Neal Kaplan, Providence

Custom Cabinetry: Jutras Woodworking, North Smithfield

Photographer: Tom Hopkins

